

“Room for Change” The Champion’s Centre’s Progressive Approach to Alberta’s Homelessness Crisis

About the book:

There should always be room for change in people—in their hearts or in their minds. Maybe people can be more open; maybe they can be more giving. In the case of the book, Room for Change, change is needed in everyone to help lift up those who cannot stand on their own. This book tells the story of the non-profit organization: The Champion’s Centre, from concept to fruition and even further into its development. Though the motto statement, “Do Good To Everyone,” may sound all encompassing, they have a direct focus on low-income and potentially homeless people. The Centre’s strive to provide housing by subsidizing the cost through the sales at their antique shops and cafés. Room for Change, is about everything relating to the Champion’s Centre—how it started, who is involved, what it entails and why it is feasible and effective. It gives readers an in-depth look at homelessness—the causes, the misconceptions, & the other options. Written in the down-to-earth style of Emily Rush, Jason Halbauer and Noah Hopchin; three college students who want to share their thoughts on the problem and The Centre itself. It offers an insightful look at the tenants of The Centre—who they are, how they got there and why they need The Centre. But it takes more than a finger to lift a pebble, and the book relates an important message about all the people needed to make The Champion’s Centre a success.
